HEAD BOY:
Bogosi Khutso Shaka Motsisi

Curro Academy Soshanguve has taught me a lot. I've been at the school since Grade 7 and, boy, did I learn a lot about the world and all its different people. To begin with, I learnt that ego isn't a good trait for a leader. I learnt that hard work pays off and that laziness is a mindset. I learnt that I am not perfect and to grow is to understand that fact. I matured and realised how, sometimes, even the smallest things you do count when all is said and done. I learnt that God is great and that everything in life happens for the greater good, even though you might not see it at the time. I learnt how to be more open to others' beliefs and opinions on things, and I learnt better collaboration skills, especially after becoming head boy of the school.

Curro Academy Soshanguve is, without a doubt, a well-oiled school, but I believe that there's always room for improvement. In my opinion, the area that needs the most improvement in the school is the extramural activities that it offers. These aren't really treated with the degree of seriousness that they should be (again, just my opinion) and thus my advice to the next group is to try to change that. Not all learners are academically gifted so I believe it is part of the school's responsibility to nurture all learners in all their respective and equally important talents. In doing so, however, the next group should also not neglect academics. My main advice for them is to pray always, work hard, try their best in everything that they do, and never give up on their dreams and goals.

HEAD GIRL:
Pontsho Pitse

I used to think that high school was a place where people would randomly break out into song and just go to the next grade. My older siblings corrected me by telling me that high school was a roller coaster! I'd like to believe that going to Curro Academy Soshanguve made this 'roller-coaster' experience a little better.

Having some of the best teachers was a big bonus. Extra classes are made available to those who need help and there's a vast amount of resources given to the learners. Teachers also avail themselves to answer questions long after class is done.

I learnt that success comes from hard work. It is not something you can wish for and just wait – putting in the work and time will have its benefits. Though some may succumb to the pressures of high school and its external factors, learning that pressure is how diamonds are made is something that helps you push through.

'If you can put your name on this day and be proud of the work done and what you've achieved, then you can call it a good day and go to sleep.' Because aiming for the moon and missing means you land among the stars. So dreaming big means achieving bigger things.

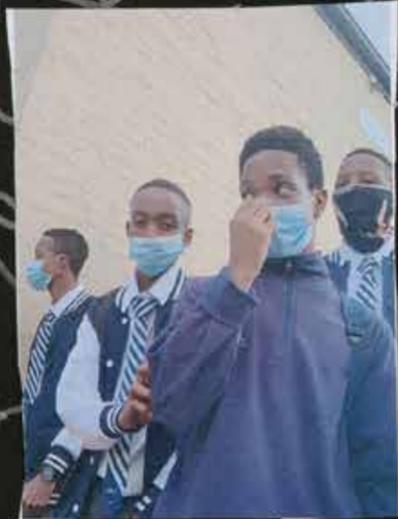

Becoming head girl was not easy and being one is not a picnic either! It has taught me patience and how to critically make a quick decision. I have also learnt that not everyone will respond well to your leadership skills, but to just throw in the towel is not an option.

Believing in people as much as my teachers have believed in me has proven to go a long way. A little bit of support can help people grow and feel more confident in themselves and their work.

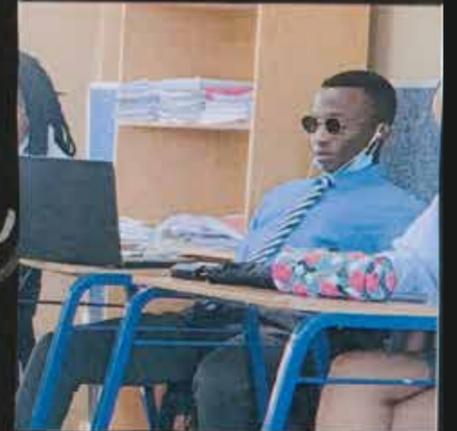

Here, at Curro Academy Soshanguve, I learnt to be a leader and that the sky is not the limit, but merely where we stand.
